SNAP

programs are free, with some requiring a nominal fee.

Certner is president and director of Special Needs Athletic Program, which is a nonprofit organization. The leadership of the program was handed over to him by his brother Matthew when he left for college in 2009. Matthew started the program, which he initially called the Sports Clinic For Children With Special Needs. The brothers changed the name to SNAP when it was incorporated as a nonprofit organization.

“It’s amazing how the community has come together behind SNAP,” Zachary Certner said. “I see kids not only more compassionate to the special-need kids, but they also become friendlier and more understanding with everyone.”

We’ve gotten feedback from parents and educators throughout Morris County on how they like the program.”

When Zachary and Matthew were children, they had a close friend, Mikey, who had autism, Zachary said. Mikey’s disability made a lasting impression on them, influencing them to want to help children with disabilities, he said.

Matthew Certner brought the program to the Morristown area in 2006, after learning about mentoring special-needs children as a sports clinic volunteer in Warren.

While the extra-curricular program is not provided by the schools, the schools have allowed it to use some school district building space and allows students to be trained at various grade levels to become mentors.

“A neat component to this training is anti-bullying, which is a high priority of the state Department of Education,” Certner said. “It puts empathy and compassion throughout the schools to make them a safe place.”

Originally, the program only trained high school students as mentors for those with special needs. Later middle school students were added as mentors, and more recently Zachary decided third- to fifth-graders should also be trained as mentors.

“I have trained every mainstream third-grader in the Morris School District to be mentors,” Certner said. “In addition to teaching special-need children, mentors just learn so much about themselves and how they can impact the lives of others, that the bonds formed in our programs are just amazing to see.”

At a special meeting on Tuesday, three area Girl Scout troops, 1224, 1864, and 495, that take part in Special Needs Athletic Program presented Certner with 120 special SNAP patches troop 1224 made, honoring the program, Certner and scouts who are SNAP mentors.

Troop 1864 Girl Scout Kyle Strasser, 10, a Special Needs Athletic Program mentor, said: “It was really great to see Zachary Certner. And I feel really great about helping someone in the community, and I love to volunteer.”

“It makes me feel good that the Girl Scouts recognize the importance of service, and this patch will allow me to take SNAP to other Girl Scout troops,” Certner said.

Certner said he hopes Special Needs Athletic Programs’ good deeds will attract a corporate sponsor so the program can acquire its own facility.

Special Needs Athletic Programs’ motto is “kids helping kids.”

SINGING

Newark.

These days the happy-go-lucky centenarian, who has mild dementia, resides at Memory Care Living at Potomac Homes. He had one party with his friends at the home and a second, larger one, thrown by the staff and his family.

Though Bornstein said he’s received his share in life, and likes parties, he still has a wish. An avid Yankees fan, he would love to meet New York Yankee Derek Jeter. Though he can’t get to the ballpark anymore, he never misses a game on television.

That would be a break from his usual routine, which includes doing puzzles with his buddy, George Deibert, one of the other 14 residents where he lives. Memory Care Living at Potomac Homes has a dozen homes, all in New Jersey, that serve as an alternative for Alzheimer’s and other dementia patients who don’t want to live in a facility.

Bornstein also sings a lot there, dances the best he can in his wheelchair, and enjoys activities and visits from relatives near and far. They include his son Donald and his wife, Laura, of Lebanon Township; his daughter Meryl Sandra of Florida; and his grandchildren, Maurissa, 32, of California, and Darin, 28, of Pennsylvania.

During the day, Bornstein said, he feels care-free. He can sit outside when the weather is nice.

“There’s a lot of grass and suddenly you feel like you’re relaxed,” he said. “You also may want to watch TV inside or read a book. You have your three meals and you do what you think is the right thing to do.”

According to Nurse Manager Paula Frisch, Bornstein shares with the staff all the wit and charm he has accumulated over the decades.

“He captivates and entertains us every day,” she said.

He likes engaging the nurses in conversation and reminiscing. Pointing to his head, he said he likes to use it because what people think and say, particularly to themselves, is the most important part of life.

“You have to say yes to yourself instead of no,” he said. “That’s what I do.”

Laura Bornstein said her father-in-law has been positive as long as she has known him.

“Now I think that’s the key to longevity,” she said.

But there is no doubt that Born
