programs are free, with some requiring a nominal fee.

Certner is president and director of Special Needs Athletic Program, which is a nonprofit organization. The leadership of the program was handed over to him by his brother Matthew when he left for college in 2009. Matthew started the program, which he initially called the Sports Clinic For Children With Special Needs. The brothers changed the name to SNAP when it was incorporated as a nonprofit organization.

"It's amazing how the community has come together behind SNAP," Zachary Certner said. "I see kids not only more compassionate to the special-need kids, but they also become friendlier and more understanding with everyone.

We've gotten feedback from parents and educators throughout Morris County on how they like the program."

When Zachary and Matthew were children, they had a close friend, Mikey, who had autism, Zachary said. Mikey's disability made a lasting impression on them, influencing them to want to help children with disabilities, he said.

Matthew Certner brought the program to the Morristown area in 2006, after learning about mentoring special-needs children as a sports clinic volunteer in Warren.

While the extra-curricular program is not provided by the schools, the schools have allowed it to use some school district building space and allows students to be trained at various grade levels to become mentors.

"A neat component to this training is anti-bullying, which is a high priority of the state Department of Education," Certner said. "It puts empathy and compassion throughout the schools to make them a safe place."

Originally, the program only trained high school students as mentors for those with special needs. Later middle school students were added as mentors, and more recently Zachary decided third- to fifth-graders should also be trained as mentors.

"I have trained every mainstream third-grader in the Morris School District to be mentors," Certner said. "In addition to teaching special-need children, mentors just learn so much about themselves and how they can impact the lives of others, that the bonds formed in our programs are just amazing to see."

At a special meeting on Tuesday, three area Girl Scout troops, 1224, 1864, and 495, that take part in Special Needs Athletic Program presented Certner with 120 special SNAP patches troop 1224 made, honoring the program, Certner and scouts who are SNAP mentors.

Troop 1864 Girl Scout Kyle Strasser, 10, a Special Needs Athletic Program mentor, said: "it was really great to see Zachary Certner. And I feel really great about helping someone in the community, and I love to volunteer."

"It makes me feel good that the Girl Scouts recognize the importance of service, and this patch will allow me to take SNAP to other Girl Scout troops," Certner said.

Certner said he hopes Special Needs Athletic Programs' good deeds will attract a corporate sponsor so the program can acquire its own facility.

Special Needs Athletic Programs' motto is "kids helping kids."

SINGING

Newark. These days the happy-go-lucky centenarian, who has mild dementia, resides at Memory Care Living at Potomac Homes. He had one party with his friends at the home and a second, larger one, thrown by the staff and his family.

Though Bornstein said he's received his share in life, and likes parties, he still has a wish. An avid Yankees fan, he would love to meet New York Yankee Derek Jeter. Though he can't get to the ballpark anymore, he never misses a game on television.

That would be a break from his usual routine, which includes doing puzzles with his buddy, George Deibert, one of the other 14 residents where he lives. Memory Care Living at Potomac Homes has a dozen homes, all in New Jersey, that serve as an alternative for Alzheimer's and other dementia patients who don't want to live in a facility.

Bornstein also sings a lot there, dances the best he can in his wheelchair, and enjoys activities and visits from relatives near and far. They include his son Donald and his wife, Laura, of Lebanon Township; his daughter Meryl Sandra of Florida; and his grandchildren, Maurissa, 32, of California, and Darin, 28, of Pennsylvania.

During the day, Bornstein said, he feels carefree. He can sit outside when the weather is nice.

"There's a lot of grass and suddenly you feel like you're relaxed," he said. "You also may want to watch TV inside or read a book. You have your three meals and you do what you think is the right thing to do."

According to Nurse Manager Paula Frisch, Bornstein shares with the staff all the wit and charm he has accumulated over the decades.

"He captivates and entertains us every day," she said.

He likes engaging the nurses in conversation and reminiscing. Pointing to his head, he said he likes to use it because what people think and say, particularly to themselves, is the most important part of life.

"You have to say yes to yourself instead of no," he said. "That's what I do."

Laura Bornstein said her father-in-law has been positive as long as she has known him.

"Now I think that's the key to longevity," she said.

But there is no doubt that Bornstein has a favorite topic when it comes to reminiscing.

His favorite topic is Edith, his late wife, who was 19 when she married him and 90 when she died. In his mid-60s Bornstein retired to care for Edith full time in their Springfield home, a job he contentedly kept until her death. At that time he was 99.

Bornstein asked his daughter-in-law to hang two caricatures on the wall in his room.

"I have them right here in the front so I don't miss them," he said, smiling as he looked at them.

The top one depicts him taking a golf swing. The bottom shows Edith looking glamorous, wearing a fancy dress, her eyelashes long, a smile on her face. Both were made decades earlier at the Doral Golf Resort and Spa.

At nighttime, with the aroma of a homemade dinner still in the air and the television in the living room playing one show or another, Bornstein can

LIFE WISDOM FROM ALBERT BORNSTEIN

- » "There is room for everything if you want to make it. If you don't want to make room, that's another story."
- » "Enjoy what you have — your lifestyle and everything else."
- » "You have to learn to love people. If they're not so great, you don't have to love them, you don't have to be with them."
- » "Adjust yourself and keep open to everybody. If somebody invites you to a party, go. Don't stay home because they're not Jewish. Keep open."
- » "I had a store of children's wear. There were some people who were hard, but most of the people were accommodating. Most people are very nice. Just remember that."
- » "The other store owners would call me, and I'd be right there. Your life can be much sweeter and better if you react that way."
- » "If you want to just pick up the bad parts of life, you're in trouble."

wheel himself to his own room, stop at the caricatures, look, and remember.

"Look at the way the artist made the dress," he said. "What a design. That's some picture."

Without moving, Bornstein can turn his head and see at eye level three large photographs hanging on a wall. The most prominent shows him and Edith on their wedding day. The second is a portrait of his parents, Gertrude and Harry Bornstein. The third shows Edith standing alone in her wedding gown.

"We were really in love," Bornstein said. "She was very nice to be with. Life was easy with a woman like my wife because she wanted to be with me. No matter where I went—a plane, a boat, in the car—she came with me. I liked that."

Memory Care Living has a book of songs from which the residents sing, and Bornstein admitted that his friends at the home usually turn to him and ask, "Albert, how about some singing?" He obliges. He knows a lot of songs, but there's one he calls his favorite:

*I'll see you in my dreams
 Hear you in my dreams
 Someone took you out of my arms
 Still I feel the thrill of your charms
 Lips that once were mine
 Tender eyes that shine
 They will light my mind tonight*

Bornstein has a special party hat, purchased for him by his granddaughter, that he keeps aside all year long. He got it for his 100th birthday party and now, as the years go by, he had added a "1," a "2," a "3," now a "4."

He's looking forward to the "5" but in the meantime, he said, he has what he needs: family he can talk to if he ever has a problem, nurses who take care of him, and sweet memories of the love of his life.

Today in History

Today is Monday, June 11, the 163rd day of 2012. There are 203 days left in the year.

1776: The Continental Congress formed a committee to draft a Declaration of Independence calling for freedom from Britain.

1919: Sir Barton won the Belmont Stakes, becoming horse racing's first Triple Crown winner.

1962: Three prisoners at Alcatraz in San Francisco Bay staged an escape, leaving the island on a makeshift raft. Frank Morris and brothers Clarence and John Anglin were never found or heard from again.

1987: Margaret Thatcher became the first British prime minister in 160 years to win a third consecutive term of office as her Conservatives held onto a reduced majority in Parliament.
