edge," Einbinder said. "You just never know where and when you could be attacked. It could happen during the day or in the nighttime." Or, more to the point, by anyone around her.

Today in History

Today is Wednesday, June 18, the 169th day of 2014. There are 196 days left in the year. Highlights in history on this date: 1812: The War of 1812 begins as Congress approves, and President James Madison signs, a declaration of war against Britain.

Burn pits Starting in 2003, defense contractors used burn pits — open-air areas in the vicinity of U.S. military bases in Iraq and Afghanistan where all types of waste, from feces and tires to batteries and used medical supplies — were incinerated.

Skills, civilian jobs While Swiss is retired, younger veterans of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars worry about supporting themselves and their families when they return home to a troubled economy.

Lingering PTSD When it comes to women serving in the military, the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan are historic territory. Eleven percent of the veterans from the newest wars who are in the VA New Jersey Health Care System are women, according to Feiner, who added that trend is consistent nationally.

Irked by attitudes Even when no particular problem faces veterans, they can be irked by the attitudes of civilians who judge what they did during their service. U.S. Marine Corps Rifleman Nick Guerra, who took part in the historic Battle of An Nasiriyah in Iraq in March 2003, remembers protesters lining the road in North Carolina when he and his fellow Marines were headed home.

"We don't know what the hell we were exposed to," said retired U.S. Army Reserve Master Sgt. Marty Swiss of Franklin (Sussex County). From October 2004 to September 2005, he lived in a Container Housing Unit (CHU) on the grounds of Saddam Hussein's main

That's the good news. She arrived at her base in Al Asad in September 2005. During the observance of Ramadan in October, there were mortar attacks at her base every day, three times a day. Sometimes the shells from an attack would land 100 feet from her.

"Despite my injuries right now, I would still do it again," Einbinder said. "I love the Marines. I joined because it's in my heart." Lorraine Ash: 973-428-6660; lash@njpressmedia.com
